Campbeltown — Morison and Son, and J. Gillies, Perth—and Mr Davidson, Inverness.

Ma Elliot, the publisher of the above works, has expended considerably more than soot, upon copy money, paper, and print of the same, depending entirely upon the patriotism of the Lovers of the Gaelic Language; but he is forry to say he has been very much disappointed, for excepting the Highland Society in London (who bought 150 ropies of the Gaelic poems), and two or three Gentlemen, none else concerned themselves, or contributed to reimburse the publisher, who had valued considerably so the subscribers to Dr Smith for the originals—but alias! the pretended patriotism for Gaelic literature seems to be gone, us not one half of faid subscribers would either take or pay their books; and had it not been for a worthy Clergyman or two, much sewer would have been paid.

The publisher, however, trusting more to parsiotism for and knowledge of the language to the advisar instabiliants of the Highlands, has published an edition of the Gaelic poems on coarse paper, at one half price, and his also retined the price of the Gaelic polam book; and for the accounty common of Gentlemen who wish to circulate them among their renams and poor neighbours gratis, and to sobolimaters and merebants in the country, they will be fold in half dozens, the poems at 150.

AGRICULTURE.

To the FARMERS of GREAT ERITAIN.

THERE is now offered a new machine for threfting.

corn, invented, and lasely, which is the grant of the mount of the machine has been are noted with much application, labour, and experice. The invention has not been offered to the public til repeated fright have ellablifhed the certainty and perfection of its operations.

It is a species of Mill. L., capable of being worked by two horses, or any power of wind or water couls to that force. The works perforaged is townsy-four buffleds of burley or oats per hour; wheat and other grain in proportion. The torn is not only separated completely from the draw but made weady for marker, by being riddled and cleaned from the chaft. No attendance is needed but that of shrea men, women or boys; one to lead the mill. one to hand up the corn is not feeder, and another to remove the straw, with a boy (if necessary) to drive the horses.

It is leadlest to institute a compartion between this and the expense of common threshing and cleaning every performered in the subject will do it for familes.

The first complete one answered for well, in point of expedition and effect, that the proprietor decised he would not take a present of common threshing by the flail.

His Majerny's Parent is obtained, in order to secure the advancage to the inventors; or contract with them for the whole at a fixed true.

The translators of Vivgil, from Pather Only downwards, ave included the find in this description " The fled, the tumbril, burdles, and the fail." Davore.

Tribulum, however, was certainly the machine first de-ferited, constructed for the single purpose of separating the grain from the huse or chast. At what period of time the stall took place of the former authorized machines, is not the fightook place of the former autward machines, is not known with certainty. Profiler Court fays, that the Turks, and many of the Irainas, have note use adopted it. The barbarous Cells, accordanced to fire and foord, made nortwork. They burned the fraw and inflantly devoured the grain. The cultom continues in the Highlands of Scotland to this day. The one routed like confectbane, and including the confectbane, and including the confectbane, and including the confectbane.

Scotland to this day. The oars roufted like tolifee-beans, are bruifed while hot, and infed as a delicacy by the common people, under the name of Gredoan, of Greetan.

To farmen it is unnecessary to point out the inconveniencies of the sailt, the labour and expense is great; the corn control be brought to market when the owner's interest or necessary requires. Molls are stopped by severe frost and feartity of water; and at other times could do four times the work, was the supply from the barn sufficient. What is worfe, a considerable part of the grain remains in the ear after the bast threshing; and when the crop is wer, ray, and ill got in, the labour and time are double, and the loss in proporation.

Threshing is one of the heavy rural labours, from which the superflictors commonality flattered themselves to have been sometimes relieved by good-patured supermanual Yelterday about four o'clock, Mr. Harlel called for the Mace, which was brought in by the Serjeant, and placed under the table.

Earl Enflor then tole, and after observing that the imfortunate event of the death of their late worthy Speaker was too well known to require his dwel ling upon the circumffunce, reminded the House the occasion called for an election of a fit and proper person to fill the vacant Chair. The Hon. Gendeman, whom he should take the liberty of propoling, was a man, his Lordship faid, of fach to did abilities, experienced affiduity, and perfect knowledge of parliamentary privilege, refulting from the closest attention to buliness, ever fince he had fat in that House, as pointed him out to be the proper fuccessor of the late Speaker. Mr Greenville was the Hon. Gentleman whom he meant to recommend, and when the House considered his excellent underflanding and unremitting industry, he trusted their minds would go with his in thinking, that these qualifications rendered Mr Grenville an object worthy of their choice. Much, he faid, might be arged on the feore of the Hon. Gentleman's private character; that flamp of merit, added to his pan-liamentage knowledge, and firength of mind and of canditation, readered him in every point of view to unesceptionable, that it was unnecessary for him to take up more of the time of the House. Gendeman had ever conducted hintels with that moderation and candour that pointed him out as a fit successor to the late Speaker. Mr Pulteney fpoke of Mr Grenville's having an hereditary claim to the favour of the House, as the guardian of its privileges, which he had fortified and established by his judicious alteration of his father's Bill; a Bill that, in his opinion, had gone further towards fe-curing the first and the most invaluable privileges of that House, than any measure that had ever taken place in parliament. He spoke of the customary place in parliament. nfage of a previous application from the Crown, when the chair became vacant; but, as under the melancholy circumstances of the times, no fuch form could take place, and it was absolutely necessary that the Chair should be filled, in order to enable that the Chair thould be when, in order to enable the house to proceed with the very delicate and peculiar business before them, which demanded dispatch, the choice of a Speaker immediately was so indispensibly hearthay; that he supposed no doubt could remain on that question. Mr Pulteney added some farther observations complimentary to Mr Grenville, and concluded with seconding the motion.

It was, he observed, a maxim land along by some authors of entirence; "That any Government was better than no Government at all;" but though he had formetty favoured that opinion, he mult now oppose it, for they feemed to be so found of the maxim, that instead of taking the short, and ready path of restoring the third estate, and give the confitution its due energy and vitary fancy. It was true, that under the profitor eaker could not he observed, and therefore the House was justified in proceeding to an immediate was very ready to pay every tribute of applaule to the Hight Hon. Baronti heir him, to whose abilities and eloquence the whole Hodge could be at resumment He meant no diffrespect therefore to the Hon. Gentleman, who had been proposed by the noble Lord, when he preferred to mention Sir Gibers Elliot as a fit person to fill the varant Chairs. He had, Mr Ellis said, had the pleasure of a west carly acquaintance with the Hon. Baronet, and keen him from his boyish days, and therefore his partially ry and predilection were pardonable. But itireflest tion, they had all been witnesses of his powerful e-loquence, and superior ability. As the Hon, Baroner, however, pofferfied the usual companion of great merit, great modelty; in compassion to his to he would forbear to fay more, but would conclu with moving, by why of amendment, that Sig Cil-bert Elliot's name be inferted in the question; a motion which be again repeated, he nade without infeeding the death difrespect to the Right Hon. Mr F. Montague professed that he entertained eery respect for the Hon. Gentleman named on the other fide of the House, in common with the noble Lord who had proposed him, and the Hon. Gentleman who had feconded him; but he must be lowed to fecond the motion made by the Right Honourable Gentleman near him. Mr Hatfel and he knew how necessary a knowledge of legal forms was, and they all must admit, that the Hon. Baronet just named, possessed that thorough acquaintance with the laws of his country, that had be continued in the Courts below, could not have failed to have rendered him one of the chief ornaments of his profeftion. Fortunately for that House, the Hos Baronet had brought that acutends of mind, that be to eminently patiefied, among them, where it could not fail to be exercised to the advantage of the pu-blic, and to his own credit. Mr Montague faid, he could expanate much more at large on the qua-lifications of the Hon. Baronet; but the last thing faid by the Right Hon. Gentlem who froke laft checked him. The House, undoubtedly would be extremely pleased, if he more to experime at length mon the hopesty bure when he epolitic derinat what mist commibute to their pleafuse push give what; must continue to their plantist and a give pain to the Honourable Baronets he would activate his inclination; cand only facond the notion of the Mr Grenville rote to fax a few words. Whatever might be the decision of the Lloufe that day, he declared he flood ever confider it; as an honour to have been thought fit to fill the Chair of that Houfe by perions of fuch high character as the noble Lord and the Hon. Centeman who had named and fe Graffon to which he had been proposed, and was for confeious of the increase of that importance in confequence of the very delicate and momentous buffiness in which the Hoose was engaged in the prefent calamitous fituation of affairs, that he trembled for himfelf, for his inexperience, and his inability to difenerge the duties of the office. These confideratheir eyes to the Hon. Baronet over the way, or to some Gentleman more worthy to fill the chair than he was, and more capable of fullaining the builden of official daty, fincerely affuring them, that, by fo doing, they would relieve his mind from great anxi-

The Lion. Gentleman over the way could not feel more deeply than he did the importance the office to which his friends had nominated h He well knew it was the duty of the person who should fill the chair, not merely to preferve decement and decorum, not merely to look to the order of their proceedings in that House, but to affert the privileges of the House, both there and elsewhere because those privileges were effected to the extension stence of Parliament, and were intimately connected with the liberties, and confequently with the happinels of those they represented. He felt his own inadequacy too fenfibly, when he confidered the high and important duties of the office; when he confiand important duties of the office; when he conne-dered the arduousness of those duties, also, as well-as the importance of the trust reposed in the person who filled the chair, it was enough to make him tremble, especially when he turned his eyes mward upon himself, and saw the montrous disproportion between his own abilities, and the fituation and its difficulties. Surrounded as he was by men of great legal knowledge and experience, he could not think taking that chair to which he fo well knew his own madequacy to do justice. If therefore none of those men to whom he had alluded were named, he could affure the Hon. Gentleman who had been proposed, that he should have his most sincere and hearty fuffrage. HOUSE OF COMMONS.

About half after three, the new Speaker entered the House in his gown and wig, preceded by the Mace, which was laid on the table. The House id not begin to fill for an hour after, the Chancelbr. of the Exchequer having waited fome time for Mr. Fox. As foon as that Hon. Member took his

Mr Loveden role, just as the Chancelloe of the Exchequer was about to rife: The House, however, having their eyes on the former, he hoped they would not think their attention infapplied for a few minutes, as he did not intend to detain them very one. He intended to make a motion; but before long. He intended to make a motion; out below face it with a few words. On the prefent occasion, it became every Member in that House to examine the ground on which they flood, in order to know the ground on which they intended to proceed. On fing this question to himself, he was free to contess, that feveral doubts had arisen in his mind, and, in judging of other gentlemen by himself, he did not doubt but similar doubts had arisen also in their minds. Before they embarked in any material queltion, he prefumed, that it could not be conubre in every possible degree. As a free agent, and a Member of Parliament, he did not think it was necessary to waste the time of the House in any apology for flating those matters. He was fent there tordischarge his duty, and he was determined to discharge it as far as his abilities and conference could direct him. From the decilion of those two, tiis wore bad always been directed.

The Speinker faid, that the most formal method of proceeding would be, first to put a negative on the The order of the day was then moved.

Mr. Hufey got up, in the gallery, and afked the Chair, Who it was that moved the order of the day? The Chancellor of the Exchequer answered, That ir was moved by a Gentleman in the bearing of feveral Gentlemen; that he had given notice of the order; and, that the full artendance was in confe-quence of the same; nor could be see to what end the motion could possibly tend. The question which he intended to hring forward was intended to difengage the House from that difagreeable situation in which they were placed of the physicians had been already examined, and the report of that examination, he was pretty couldent, was fresh in the me-mory of every Centleman prefent. It was agreed on all hands; from that report, that his Majetty was not in a capacity to attend public business; from whence it was apparent, that the first step was to reflore that defect, in order to add energy and effect to executive Government; and the re-examination of so melancholy a subject, would only cause that delay which he deprecated, and which every man ought to deprecate. Those that were intended to be taken into the considence of the Region, surely ought to avoid it; and those who were already in administration oright to avoid it, on account of the embarraffed fituation in which they flood. therefore, Gentlemen were of opinion that his Majefty's 'indisposition was either more or less distant, and that fuch Gentlemen could substantiate that opinion from avgument and reason, and likewise make that opinion the ground of praceeding, he was determined to vote against the motion made by the Hon. Gentleman oppoints to him and real man man men against Mr Fox declared reliate he, was as much against delay as the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Pitts) but that he had heard for many reports without doors, relative to the melincholy fauation of his Majeffy, as weighed very much with him in favour of the nrotion just made by the Hon. Member under the gallery. He was as little disposed, and he spoke from experience, to lend an car to idle reports as any other gentleman whatever, had he not heard that the first Minister of the Crown (the Lord Chancellor) elsewhere had declared that his Majesty was better fince the examination of the Phylicians, and that there were hopes of a speedy recovery. If Gentlemen therefore entertained an idea that his Majetty's recovery was probable (which he trufted it was,) and that recovery was within a limited time, and if the Right How Gentleman intended to these his Regency bill in proportion to any calculation betwixt thefe two extremes, he did think that a reexamination of the Phylicians was absolutely necesfary, as it was plain, if this was the cafe, that the precise fituation of the King was to be made the ground of procedure, and that the executive power was to be firengthened or reffricted according to the fliades of those extremes. A month had now chapfed fince the examination of the Phylicians by that House, and fince that period, it was not to be sup-posed that Members of Parliament were put into the possession of any information on that subject; he therefore conceived that the motion is question was absolutely necessary.

Mr Baftard faid a few words agains and thought that the personal incapacity of execureceding to the immediate discussion of the order of the day.

Mr Burke protested, that he was glad to find, that the Right Hon. Gentleman had changed his os inion and that inflead of a weak Government he was determined to add energy and effect to Go wernment; this was certainly preferable to the mode at first suggested, of carving out the Constitution like a carcafe to hounds. Mr. Burke, on this, alluded to the various reports relative to the fituation of his Majesty. As Gentlemen had however been called what to substantiate their opinion by facts, he led then to fubitantiate their opinion by facts, he intended to do fo : as he was confcious of the weak nessof his capacity, he endeavoured to supply that defect by information; he, therefore, begged the in tention of the House to a paper, which he had then in his hand, the authenticity of which could not be controverted : This paper was the report of the examination of the Phylicians, at the bar of the House of Lords, on the 11th of December lalt; and as it was not informat to read it, confidering the fires. tion they were in, he read a few of the leading que-flions - an answer to one of which was, that therewas the less probability of his Majelty's recovery in roportion to the time which he continued under his difeafe. In confequence of this, the Hin. Mentil ber adduced many arguments to thew the receffice of adopting the motion for the re-examination of the Physicians at the bar of the House, which he pres-ferred to any other, as the most likely to pur men Hone in possession of the information sought for on which he gave his reasons to shew, that every many ther mode was inadequate; nor did he see any obe-jection to examination at the bar of the House.

The Chancellar of the Exchequer observed, that fo much had already been said on the subject of his Majesty's health, that he now thought an additional enquiry was absolutely necessary; he therefore found himself compelled to vote against his own motion of the order of the day, which he should persist in withdrawing, in order to frame another for the purpole of appointing a felect Committee to re-examine the physicians. That mode of examination he true fled would be approved by the House, from motives of delicacy, as the same purpose would be answered by it, as by an examination at the bar, and he thought it might be accomplished without much large of time. The funmontes might be iffed to night, fo as the examination might take place to morrow and the House would afterwards determine whether the report from the Committee was of that Importance as to require to be printed, or whether they would rest fatisfied with having it read.

Sir Peter Burrell faid, if ever there was a quemode of proceeding of which the forms of the House admitted, it was the prefent; he was therefore of opinion that the Phylicians ought to be examined at the bar by a Committee of the whole House, in-stead of a scleet Committee. The notoriety of sich a proceeding was its best recommendation, and there furely was no reason to apprehend that any Gentleman in that House would put any indelicate or indecent question to any of the Physicians. He maintained, that what was necessary to be done could not be indecent, and he conceived. That in a cafe on which one of the most important and momentous questions ever agitated in that affembly was to be founded, they could not be too ferupulousing the form of their proceeding, nor too anxious to get at the truth,

Sir James Johnstone was against the examination, as he said he never heard of two Physicians this agreed in one point in his life.

Lord North entered into a warm and marily de-fence of the private and professional character of Dr Warren; hitherto his ficill as a Phyfician was never doubted, nor his integrity as a gentleman im-

Mr Pitt answered, that Dr Warren's Beill as a Physician was generally spoken of, but that, seconding to his own words, his experience was but comparative to that species of malady with which his Majesty's was affected. He then took notice of warm manner in which Mr Burke had conveyed himself, and declared, that his opinion was that his Maiesty was much better fince that examination of the Phylicians took place : That he had grounds in support of this opinion, but that he gave it with ince, and that it was extorted from him. As the debate had, however, taken for unexpected a turn, and as matters had affen that ought to be determined, he felt himfelt inclined to withdraw his own question, in order to give way to the motion ; as he thought it better to proceed on certain grounds, however it might occasion a delay, than to embark precipitately. The examination could not take up more than a day or two, and in point of decency, preferred a felect Committee to examination at the bar. On this he remarked on fome words which had tallen from Mr Burke and Mr Fox. Wall

Mr Pultency having Stated the question, gave it as his opinion, that the examination of the Phylicians, was unnecessary, and on that account he should not confent that the question should be withdrawn.

Mr Fox role to explain, and having placed the argument which he had reviously arged on the subject in the clearest point of view; he adverted to the character of Dr Warren:—Of eminence in all profestions, laid he, that of a Phylician is the least equiviocal-neither friend hip or connection in pur litics dictate in that respect; the person who is in-disposed places himself always in the hands of that Phytician who is the most likely to accomplish the removal of the difeate; not even the heat of an election is able to fivay in the favour of a Phylician or an Apothecary, who may be supposed to give or canvas for a vote; as health is one of the first enjoyments of human life, it rifes superior to every other, confideration. As this is the true criterion of judging of the fame and fuccess of a Physician, it is plain that Dr Warren must be the first, as he has the greatest number of patients; and as to the opinion which he entertained of his Majeffy's fruation, he fhould referre it to himfelf.

Mr Rolls and that the name of Dr Warren was first mentioned by the fide of the House on which Mr Burke sat.

Mr Sunner thought that the examination of the Physicians at the bar of the House, would reflect on the Committee, who had been appointed for that person a former occasion.

Mr Sheridan made a few remarks on fome expressions which had fallen from Mr Pitt; and really, thought that a re-examination should take placed in justice to Dr Warren, in whose character the public were interested, as far as it concerned his attendance on the King.

The question being called for from both fides of the House, the gallery was ordered to be cleaned for a division; but Lord North again rofe, and multed that the Lord North agam rote, and minted that the question had rifen to such a degreee of importance that it would be the height of injustice to Dr Wanten, and cruelty to the public at large, to hold back any information that might be derived from a further examintion of the Physicians. Dr Warren's character particularly was of too much importance to be a property of the public of the most discounter that the most discounter the most discounter that the most d trifled with, or for a moment to endure the most di-flant reflection. With respect to the examination than reflection. With respect to the examination before, a Committee, or at the Barrof the House, which was the only point which feemed not to be agreed upon, his Lordship gave it as his opinion, that the more clear and explicit way in which the opinions of the Medical Gentlemen were conveyed, the more fatisfactory it would be to the public, which with the greatest anxiety waited the awful every with the greatest anxiety waited the awful event.

For that reason, if it was a question, whether the further examination should be taken at the Bar, or before a committee, he fhould certainly vote for the

Mr Pitt replied, that he certainly foodd refift the examination at the bar, as being equally un-necessary and indelicate.

After a few observations from Mr Fox. Mr Idwards, and Mr Pultney, in which it appeared that it was not the general with to prefs an examination at the bar, Mr Lovedea's motion for a farther examination of the Phylicians, was put and carried athour a division.

Upon this smeadment a very defailtory converfaion took place, which continued upwards of an hour, and in the early part of which all firangers were exluded from the House.

The amendment was opposed by Mr Pitt, the Atther Members, who infifted that the only reason or any further examination was avowedly for the urpole of afcertaining the state of the King's health ince the last examination, and the consequent reort which the last Committee had made to the four. It was upon these terms only that the louse had acceded to the proposition, and that the tempt to call in the advice of gentlemen totally macquainted with the cafe, was at once an infultion the judgment of the Hones, and upon the cre-lat and veracity of the gentlemen who had constantly attended his Majesty.—A very confused conver-tation took place, which was at last ended by a loud call for the question.—A division took places, when

The amendment being rejected, a convertation ook place for half an hour more, Whether certain recife questions should be put to the Physicians. respecting his Majetty's piclent state, or whether the questions should be left to the Committee to put such questions in general terms as each individual might deem necessary? At half after eight the subject was dropped, and the House adjourned till Thurstay and

The appointment of Mr Grenville as Speaker of the House of Commons, is exactly correspondent with the present Ministerial system. They choice Lord Mulgrave, a naval softeer, to be Paymaster General of the army the Earl of Chatham, a ministery officer, to be First Lord of the Admiralty; to they have just chosen for Speaker of the Lower House, a Gentleman without experience of Parlia-mentary cultum, and who withal cannot speak with-out stammering, or see two yards before him.—

"On Wednesday the 31st December last, a General Meeting of the Burgestes attached to Reform, was held in the Theatre of this place. The Meeting was truly numerous, tespeciable, and orderly.

The sease were filled with Burgestes of all ranks and conditions, and of different religions and political persuasions. The stage was also crowded; and the Committee was attended by a body of the most distinguished of their fellow citizens. After the most distinguished of their fellow citizens. After the progress made in the business of Reform, and of the affistance given it by some of the most exalted the racters in Great Britain; and at the same time, of the necessay of a further contribution to define anotteer all which information with the second expensions of satisficated. The Committee of Burgesses was thanked by the placeting, and requested to continue the business, and all corners of the House, it was broughs forward, and begun with a spirit that promises soon to complete our quota of expenses.

The Dunder Committee was originally composed of persons of the little confideration in the town taking them in any view, but most of them too much engaged in commercial pursuits, to be able to give attention enough to the abjects of Reform. Now, however, it has got a great accession to several new Members, among whom are the three clergymen of the town, whose zeal in the case of freedom is greatefully acknowledged by the people.
